

Sign a petition

Individual women and men signed a petition that said they agreed with Manitoba women getting the right to vote.

Donate money to support the cause

Mary Hamble donated money to the Manitoba Political Equality League. The League worked to make people more aware of women's right to vote.

Attend an event

Individuals showed their support for women's right to vote by attending meetings, protests, talks and social events.

Join with national organizations

Local women's groups joined with national organizations such as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Hold group activities

Manitoba women held social events or "Pink Teas" in their homes so women could discuss the struggle for equal rights.

Get support from others

Manitoba women's groups got support from other organizations, such as the Manitoba Grain Growers Association.

Take part in public events

The Manitoba Political Equality League set up a booth at the Winnipeg Stampede, where they handed out pamphlets about women getting the vote.

Attract attention through advertising

The Manitoba Political Equality League ordered 100 banners to hang on Winnipeg streetcars.

Use humour to get noticed

Women created a theatrical show with a humorous debate on whether men should have the right to vote.

Ask people to sign a petition

Women brought petitions to church meetings, family gatherings and community events where they could ask a lot of people to sign the petitions.

Present a petition

A petition presented to the provincial premier had over 40,000 signatures. The petition showed that people supported women's voting rights.

Promote the introduction of a bill

Activists convinced Premier Norris to introduce a bill in the Manitoba legislature. This bill would allow women to vote in the province of Manitoba.

Contact an elected member

Women contacted all members of the Manitoba legislature to demand that women get the right to vote.

